

Idaho Press Tribune, Saturday, Aug. 20, 2011 – Staff report

Terry Reilly receives federal healthcare grant

Not-for-profit plans new Middleton location by Dec. 1

NAMPA — Terry Reilly Health Services, a not-for-profit medical organization in the Treasure Valley, announced Friday that it will open a new healthcare facility in Middleton. The result of a $650,000 grant, the clinic will create 11 new positions and see an estimated 8,300 patients per year.

Terry Reilly is one of 67 organizations selected for the grant, which was made possible by the Affordable Care Act of 2010. The Bureau of Primary Health Care, a part of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, received more than 800 applications from around the country. Terry Reilly was the only organization from Idaho selected.

Terry Reilly clinics charge patients based on their ability to pay, with a sliding scale based on family income. The grant is designed to help establish and support the new Middleton clinic, so that it can serve patients with private insurance, Medicaid, Medicare and those who are uninsured.

“We care more about our patients and their health than we care about the type of health insurance they have or how much money they make,” Tim Brown, executive director of Terry Reilly, said in a prepared statement. “We are excited to be able to bring our services directly to the community of Middleton.”

Terry Reilly has until Dec. 1 to open its new location. Services provided will include medical and dental care, mental health counseling and case management services.

The Middleton Clinic will be Terry Reilly’s 7th medical office and 5th dental office in the Treasure Valley.